New program aimed to keep students safe

By Rachel Christian
Staff Writer

Last week, Osceola County School District officials met with police and education leaders to discuss the need for more law enforcement in schools.

Dr. Ross Gibson, superintendent of Osceola County Schools, said the district is looking at ways to increase educational initiatives.

"We're facing a mental health crisis in our schools," he said. "We need to find new ways to engage students and help them reach their full potential."